Organization of the Pennsylvania Music Teachers' Association.

A BRANCH OF THE NATIONAL BODY

Pittsburg's Reputation as a Musical Center Increasing. WHAT OUR LOCAL MUSICIANS ARE DOING

The organization of the Pennsylvania Music Teachers' Association, which occurred at Philadelphia on Friday, the 5th inst., is for this city the most important result of the first meeting held by the National Association within the Keystone State. Such a step has for some time been in contemplation by some of the leading teachers of the State. Our own Mr. Jos. H. Gittings broached the matter in a letter to President Heath, of the M. T. N. A., last year, but it was prudently decided to wait for the Philadelphia meeting of the general body as furnishing the best conditions for starting the branch in this State. As Vice President of the M. T. N. A. for Pennsylvania, Mr. Gittings took the initiative again this year, and got together a score or more of Pennsylvanians attending the larger meeting, who organized by electing the larger meeting, who organized by electing the following officers for the coming year: President, William Wolseifer, Philadelphia: Vice President, Joseph H. Gittings, Pittsburg; Secretary, Henry G. Thunder, Philadelphia; Treasurer, Fred. S. Law, Philadelphia; Executive Committee, C. A. Hartman, Philadelphia Ad. M. Foerster and Chas. Davis Carter, Pitts Ad. M. Foerster and Chas. Davis Carter, Prits-burg: Programme Committee. Charles H. Jar-vis, S. Behrens, and Dr. Aaron Taylor, Phila-delphia. While one might wonder if there were no music teachers present from other places than the two largest cities, the sames on this list of officers are of reputation more than sufficient to guarantee the character and stability of the organization. stability of the organization.

For the first regular meeting of the new stability of the organization.

For the first regular meeting of the new body, the Executive Committee was directed to choose the most suitable days of the next Christmas holidays. It is the expectation that after its Detroit meeting next July, the National Association will assemble only once every two years, leaving one year entirely yearnt for the State Associations—a plan that will further the best interests of both, by dividing the work and lessening the expense.

The Penn-ylvania Association starts out with the membership fee at the very modest figure of $1, payment of which entitles any music teacher to active membership; the same payment by one not a music teacher entitles him to attend the public meetings for essays, discussions and musical performance without right to vote or hold office, etc. No especial plan was formulated for hiring the costiy but all important orchestra, to pay which has caused such difficulty in the National Association, even when it levied an initiation fee of $3 and annual dues of $2 besides. This vexed question will be one of the first hard nuts to be cracked by the new organization when it gets fairly on its feet.

Thus far only a tare outline of the Christmantide meeting has been decided upon: there will be an evening of banqueting or other incentive to sociability and acquaintane making, and the two following days and evenings will be divided up into meetings for business, elections, discussions, essays and concerts.

The benefits to be derived from such organized activity among music teachers are self evident. In no other department of education is there a more plentiful lack of systematic, scientific methods of instruction; yet, in no other department is there a greater prevalence of self-satisfied isolation, of jealous reluctance to learn anything from fellow teachers. It ennet fail to do much good to the music teacher, of all persons, to get together with his professional comrades (no longer merely comto learn anything from leniow teachers. It cannot fail to do much good to the music teacher, of all persons, to get together with his professional comrades (no longer merely competitors) to compare notes, to exchange experience and ideas and, generally, to get out of himself and into the broad field of true art

Mr. George H. Wiison's "Musical Year-Book of the United States," (Vol. VI.; season of 1888-9), puts in its cheery reminder that, if we are not already a musical folk, we are taking several steps in that direction each year. The general features of the present volume are much the same as in its predecessors. The omission of the wonted article giving a bird's-eye-view of the country's musical progress for the year, is missed; but it will doubtless gain in point and value by coming only once every two or three years. As against this omission, the paragraphs and tables of general information have been given a greater scope that increases

Mr. Wilson's little book does not undertake to give comment or criticism (by the way, how characteristic of the genial author is his pleasant reference to Mr. Krebbiel's New York record, which does!; it is simply a classified chronicle of such public musical happenings throughout the country as are compatible with a high standard, nothing particularly first performances for the locality or for the country, new works in the larger forms for the country, new works in the larger forms for the world at large, new American compositions performed at home and abroad, etc. As a thoroughly reliable chronicle of such matters, this little volume is entirely sni generis and should be on every music-lover's table.

The Pittsburg record includes the Mozart Club concerts, the May Festival, the Nevin-Magnille recitals and Mr. George Russell Craig's concerto concerts. The May Festival apparently came too late for complete revision of the proofs containing its features; the name of Max Alvary (who was not here) appears instead of Paul Kalisch, and Chopin's E-flat concerto is assigned to Miss Aus der Ohe in place of Lisart's in the same key. Pittsburgers will also be interested in the increased frequency with which the familiar names of Foerster. Nevin, Nicholl and Retter appear among the composers throughout the book.

Mr. Wilson, by the way, sails by the Aurania this week for Europe and Bayreuth. Readers of The Disparch may have the pleasurable apticipation of soon scanning a few letters from his piquiant pen on the Wagner Festival and other topics likely to fall under the observation of a musical pigrim.

Crotchets and Quavers. ETELEA GERSTER was engaged to sing three nights in June at Kroll's Garden, in Ber-lin, opening June 21, as Lucia.

MR. CHARLES DAVIS CARTER spends about three days a week at the Lutheran Female Seminary, in Greensburg, giving vocal instruc-tion to a sizable summer normal class. THE short engagement of Marcella Sem brich at Paris closed with Rossini's "Barbier."

The enthusiasm was great, as Sembrich sang the role of Rosine very effectively. "GWENDOLINE" is the name of an opera that has attained success at Carlsruhe, Baden, before a critical audience. It is composed by a French pro-Wagnerian—Chabrier—and is ex-ceedingly modern in character.

DR. J. S. WALTERS has lately become the proud possessor of a costly violoncello, which looks old and ugly enough, and sounds big and sweet enough to be considered an exceptional nstrument, though its exact pedigree is not

MR. WILSON G. SMITH and Mr. Johann B.

Beck, the well-known Cleveland composers, stopped over for a few days last week, on their way from the M. T. N. A. meeting, to visit Mr. Ad M. Foerster. Mr. Beck has gons up to Uniontown over Sunday, and will return for a few days more with his Pittsburg friends. How strange it will seem to speak of the Frohsian Verein without including Mr. Franz Lohmann, its successful conductor for more than a score of years! Mr. Lohmann's resigna-tion leaves a vacancy that it will be exceedingly hard to fill permanently. Mr. Ad M. Foerster has stepped into the breach for the time being.

THE first of the Wagner operas to be sung in the Hungarian language during the Wagner -vclus at Buda-Pest is "Tristan und Isolde;" the second, "The Meistersinger." Buda-Pest will be the first city in which the Wagner series will be given in a language other than German, says the Musical Courier—a fact which is the more strange us Wagner so stremuously insisted upon having the audience understand the words of his rarely poetical libretti.

Some discussion may be heard among such nusical folk as are left in town and still able musical folk as are left in town and still able to talk, as to the change in the Mozart Club's association membership privileges: Will the two seats each for the five concerts prove more effective in cauturing the coy ten-dollar bill than did the four seats each for three concerts? Most people think the new distribution the better, especially since it is expressly coupled with the plan of having the Boston Symphony Orchestra, or one similar, for the final concert. THAT final concert of the Monongahela Choral Club, of Monongahela City, seems to have stirred the music-loving people of "Hazardville" profoundly. A good hundred of hem have railied as associate members around he 50 chorus singers and formed an organiza-ion which now stands musically, socially and inancially on a firm footing. The club at its ast rehearsal presented their director, Mr. Thas. Davis Carter, of Pittsburg, with a hand-ome gold watch suitably engraved.

TAMAGNO, the tenor, made his first appearace in England July 5 at the Lyceum as Oiello. In the part of Iago, Cataneo that of Jesdemono, and Paroll was Cassio. This was Pittsburg. Use elevator.

the first performance of this opera in England.

Tamagno has a voice of astounding proportions, powerful in all registers. He made a tremendous effect in the speech "Otello"s occupation's gone." He played the last act with a passionate intensity which carried the house by storm. Maurel is a great artist. His Iago was a superb piece of acting and finished singing. The production was a decided success.—London cablegram.

What is the matter with those free concerts

WHAT is the matter with those free concert in the Allegheny Parks? Surely the public spirited citizens and business men are not going to let that pretty pavilion decay in disuse. It such subscriptions as were given in past seasons cannot be obtained, why not arrange benebes around the pavilion and charge a nickel or so for everybody who wants to sit down, leaving the mass of the people to stand free as they always have done? Surely some scheme of this nature would be feasible. Such charges for seats are almost universal in public parks, cathedrals, etc., across the water, especially when anything is going on to draw a crowd.

SOMETHING OF A CHANGE.

A New Plan for Redeeming Torn Legal Tender Notes. WASHINGTON, July 13 .- The United States Treasurer has ordered that in the future the redemption of legal tender- notes by the Treasury Department shall be made on the basis of the three-fifths rule in vogue in the redemption of national bank notes.

Heretofore the former were redeemed on the basis of the tenths, that is, a mutilation was not redeemed at a value proportionate to the part presented, counting in tenths.
Under the three-fifths rule if that part of a note is presented it is redeemed at its full face value, but if less than three-fifths is handed in, nothing is paid unless an affi-dayit is filed, together with evidence to sup-port veracity that the missing portion of the note has been destroyed. Thus under this rule the person presenting the note gets all or nothing, instead of a proportionate num-ber of tenths of the full value.

NOT A PUBLIC TRUST.

A Deputy Postmuster Who Gobbled Part of the Government Funds. WATERTOWN, N. Y., July 13 .- Post office Inspector Batchellor has inspected the postoffice in this city and discovered shortage of over $600 in Deputy Postmaster Charles F. Quencer's accounts. To-day Quencer voluntarily disclosed further small deficiencies. His bondsmen have paid the deficiency, and Quencer has given bonds to appear in the United States Court in Sep-

COMPU continued to blink at the black fog without.

Highness drank his cup of coffee slowly, and continued to blink at the black fog without. He was bald to a very pronounced degree. Indeed, few men are more destitue of the customary thatch. The whole upper portion of his head, almost down to his ears, was a polished, shining pate, which the artists of the illustrated in white brilliancy the surface of a mely-polished billiard ball. The delicate tracery of hair which the artists of the illustrated papers usually place on the top of the Prince's head is a pure gratuitous compliment. His beard was of sandy color, heavily streaked with gray. His face was colorless. He looked 50 or 60 years of age. While one of his valeta attended to the bath, which had to be warmed to a temperature of exactly 20, another laid out the prince's clothes. It is a particular fad of His Highness that he can dress more rapidly than any man in the kingdom. Even princes have foibles, and this is one of the most innocent of those which distinguish that many man in the kingdom. Even princes have foibles, and this is one of the most innocent of those which distinguish princes have foibles, and this is one of the brinkly and violently with coarse towels, so as to keep down the fat.

Shortly before 9 o'clock the Prince entered his own breakfast room, on the second floor of the Mariborough House, and stood with his back to the grate fire, careless of the prince of the same particularly tall men form, but he depends very greatly upon his friends for griving him the news.

Two of these friends had already dropped in to see him, in the persons of Sir George Chetwynd and Lord Arlington. Though neither of them are particularly tall men they towered above the little Prince like grants. The punctuality of the Prince of Wales ha grown almost into a proverb. He is never behind time, and he is about the only member of any of the royal families of Europe who does not keep a special train waiting for hours after he has ordered it. At 10 o'clock he after he has ordered it. At 10 o'clock he walked into the library with a fresh cigarette in his hand, and talked half an hour with the secretaries who attend to the vast correspondence of the Prince. Only a small portion of the letters were submitted to His Royal Highness. The others, which were, in a large measure, petitions, gifts or invitations of a semisocial kind, were attended to without the Prince's knowledge. While His Royal Highness was looking over one or two letters of special importance, the Hon, Harry Tyrwhitt-Wilson, who is the favorite equery of the Prince, and who always accompanies him on his continental tours, hurried in and began an excited talk about a fox terrier which was just then the property of Lord Arthur Somerset, and which Colonel Tyrwhitt-Wilson was very anxious to get for the Prince. It transpired that the Prince was anxious to get if for a certain sprightly and beautiful somebody else, but Lord Arthur Somerset was inclined to hold on to his prize winner stubbornly. The thing was to get the dog secretly and quietly. All the details of the correspondence were thrust aside, while the discussion went on concerning the fox terrier. Colonel Tyrwhitt-Wilson talked with the utmost absorbtion and without much ceremony. Perhaps his usefulness to the prince in his continental tours had something to do with his ease in the presence of his iture sovereign.

He left the room by one door as the Prince of Wales strode out by another and went back to his dressing room to select some wedding presents for the daughters of several peers of the realm, who were shortly to be married. The presents had been spread out artistically, and His Highness picked them out with a wave of the foreinger, and told his secretary for whom each gift was intended. This duty over, he drew on his gloves, put on his hat, and, descending to the Pall Mall entrance of Mariborough House, siepped into the heavy family carriage, which he uses on civic visits, and drove over toward Kensington Oval.

WATCHING CRICKET. walked into the library with a fresh cigarette

WATCHING CRICKET. The Duke of Beaufort, who is a staunch old ally of the Prince's, was waiting beside the carriage. He drove with the Prince to the cricket grounds. The old Duke's spare figure was held upright by stiff stays, and his face displayed the amiability of a beau of the last century, despite its hundreds of wrinkles, and the marks left by a life of extraordinary dissipation. The occasion was a game for the championship between the gentlemen amateurs of Great Britain and the professionais. Both of the elevens stopped playing to cheer the Prince when he appeared at the window of the clubbouse. Then the game went on.

The Prince and the Duke sat side by side, with their hast silted over their eyes, and their feet on the window sill. The President of the club and a half dozen officers hovered around the chairs of the two distinguished visitors, but they were chatting together in a low tone about the game and paid no attention to their hosts. At 12 o'clock precisely, His Royal Highness rose, and, bidding the Duke remain where he was, descended the stairs rapidly to the main ground. Though the move was quietly made, he found nearly a 1,000 people waiting around his carriage and, as he passed through the lane which the police made for him, he bowed politely to a feeble cheer. The footman slammed the door of the carriage, climbed up to the box seat and the Prince was driven rapidly to the studio of one of the most distinguished portrait painters in Great Britian.

The tenants of the Prince's country seat had subscribed enough money to pay for a portrait of the Prince, and they were having it painted as a present for the Prince of Waless. A dummy in the person of an abandoned alcoholic swell of rather handsome physique sat every day in the Prince's clothes, so that the artist could get what is presumed to be his figure, while His Royal Highness gave a half hour sitting twice a week for his face. It was scarcely a half hour this time, however. The Prince and into a luxurious chair prepared for him directly in the way of whatever light could struggle through the fog of the north window, answered the orth half of the carriage. He drove with the Prince to the cricket grounds. The old Duke's spare figure

ONE TRIUMPH. ONE TRIUMPH.

He had got the dog and it had only cost him 230. The matter had been managed through a tradesman, whom he knew and Lord Arthur Somerset had never suspected to whom the dog was going. The news seemed to please the Prince more than anything else in the world, and, with a gracious nod of farewell to the ariist, he walked out of the room, and, leaving the honorable and successful Tyrwhitz Wilson at the door, drove to the Mariborough Club and took a hasty bite of luncheon.
